"YOU CAN DO IT WITH A REO"

Alliance Man takes a Convey of Trucks and Cars Through Snowdrifts

Jack Noble, salesman for the A. H. Jones company, is a firm believer in the slogan, "You Can Do It With a Reo." He knows you can, for he's done it himself. Noble has the northwest territory for the company, and the gang at the Alliance headquarters are still talking over the way he covered himself and the Reo with glory during the bid storm the middle of December, when he took three trucks and a passenger car to Lusk, and Casper, Wyo., when the very trains that hauled the varnished cars puffed and puffed and finally quit in the middle of snowdrifts.

It was some trip, that little journey to Wyoming. The temperature was only 36 degrees below zero, and it was so cold that the roads were contracted to such an extent that in places the fences along the roadside were in the middle of the road. The convey started the day that No. 42 was stalled in a snowdrift at Berea. It took a lot of faith in the car, as well as four drivers and four extra men with shovels, to induce even an enthusiastic salesman to start out.

Like No. 42, they made Berea without any great delay. And after that the difficulties began to arise at a rapid rate. The first place they were actually stalled was at Marsland. One old timer there, who knew all about the roads and the drifts, bet $10 they'd never make it 'till after a thaw. Noble promptly took him up. The shovel gang started to work, and the convey again shoved off.

Progress was steady, but by no means rapid. The roads were impassable in places, but the three trucks and the passenger car proceeded to get around the obstacles they couldn't go through or over. They way led through pastures and fields, across ditches and other uncharted places, and the procession failed to halt. Misfortune caught up with them at last. One of the drivers froze his feet—and another got cold feet and quit.

This meant a delay of two days. The boys camped for that long at a hospitable ranch house, but the minute new drivers were secured, again hit the trail. And, by dint of considerable pushing of the pedals, they arrived. The whole trip took only four days, exclusive of the ranch house interlude.

Take it all in all, it was a remarkable performance, and demonstrated pretty conclusively that trucks—Reo trucks, at least—are built not alone for paved streets, but for the hardest, meanest thoroughfares in the world—western Nebraska roads drifted high with snow. The Antioch bus that has scarcely missed a trip during the worst of the weather made an enviable record, but the trick of taking three big trucks a distance of several hundred miles over that kind of roads remains to be beaten. Can you blame those fellows for speaking positively when they tell you that "You Can Do It With a Reo?"

Twenty-three states have accepted the federal woman suffrage amendment to date. But thirteen more ratifications are needed to bring to a victorious conclusion a struggle that was considered lost at the time it was begun. In twenty-one states, including Nebraska, women will vote for presidential nominees regardless of whether the federal amendment carries.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION NOTES

Lincoln.—The committee on committee fees, acting on the suggestion of the committee on rules, which in turn acted on the suggestion of the convention that there were many able bodied members of the committee serving on standing committees that has nothing to do, reported from two to four additional members of some of the larger committees. The report, which was adopted, makes the following additional assignments to standing committees: Bill of Rights—Wiltse and Norval.

Legislative—Cleave, Cornell, Lahners and Strong.

Executive—Junkin, Beeler, Sullivan and Lehman.

Judicial—Keefe and Price.

Education—Elwood and Osborne.

Revenue and Taxation—Abbott, Austin, Johnson and Wilde.

Municipal Government—Fuglesay, Marvin, Sughrone and Norton.

Industrial Conditions—Sprick, Svoboda, Halderman and Seleck.

Miscellaneous Subjects—Rankin, Scott, Saunders and Fernau.

Schedules—Peterson, Malicky, Wilson of Douglas, Ross.

Wilson of Dawes submitted an amendment which would change the time of election of governor and other executive officials and legislative members to the odd-numbered years, and hold legislative sessions in the even numbered, extending the term of those officials elected in 1922 one year. This would abandon the present biennial election, and call for an election each year. Other state officials, including judges, university regents, railway commissioners, congressmen, senators and county officials would be elected in even years. Initiative or referendum propositions would then be submitted at the election any year.

A proposal, submitted to the convention by Lewis of Wayne, an educator, may be intended to be a portion of a plan to place the university and normal schools and other educational institutions under one board or head. It is not necessarily a part of such a plan, but it follows in the wake of it. The proposal is No. 223. It provides that the legislature may levy a permanent tax for the support of educational institutions and apportion and appropriate such funds or any other funds to such institutions.

William Jennings Bryan, speaking before the constitutional convention, January 12, advocated a broad, liberal constitution, free of any provisions curtailing liberties of the people. He declared for free speech, a free press and peaceable assembly. He also declared in favor of public ownership in general, and especially municipal ownership of all public utilities. He advocated public ownership of stock yards. The constitution, he said, should be constructed for easy amendment by popular vote.

Col. T. J. Majors of Peru, member of the state normal board, is credited with being the author of a proposal by Wall of Sherman to give constitutional recognition to the present system of state normal schools. The proposal is No. 222. It provides that the normal schools shall be under control of a board of seven, six of whom are to be appointed by the governor, the state superintendent to be ex-officio member.

Two proposals affecting the time of legislative sessions and the pay of members have been offered by Delegate Svoboda of Howard county. One advances the date for the convening of the legislature from the first week in January to the third Tuesday in November, following the election. The other raises the pay from $600 per session to $10 per day for not more than 100 days, or $1,000 in all.

John Wiltse of Richardson submitted two proposals last week, one for the recall of public officials except judges, the legislature to provide the legal machinery, and another which would require the payment of all fines and licenses to counties or to cities and villages instead of to the school funds of the district in which the fines or licenses are imposed.

Delegate Junkin submitted an amendment during the past week which would tilt the lid considerably on the amount of indebtedness the state may assume. The state now may contract in indebtedness of 100,000. The Junkin proposal would increase it to $1 per capita, which, on the basis of present population, would be approximately 11,500,000.

There is a disposition on the part of standing committees not to report to the convention on the disposition of pending proposals for amendments to the constitution until a report containing all the ideas of the committees on that subject is drawn up in form of committee proposals and submitted to the convention.

Twenty-five members of the convention journeyed to Omaha last Monday to hear W. J. Bryan deliver the first of a series of speeches he proposes to make on the 1920 national campaign.

The committee on education has decided to recommend to the convention the rejection of all proposals relating to compulsory education or the teaching of foreign languages in public schools, deeming sufficient the supreme court's recent ruling that the present legislature had ample power.
